

VARIETIES OF RADISHES

While most people are familiar with small, red radishes, there are many varieties of radishes. Some are small, some are big, and some are even purple!

Cherry Belle Radishes have roots that are round, red, small, and smooth, making it a familiar and classic radish. Cherry Belles are white on the inside and crisp, with just a little bite. Originally from Holland, these radishes grow well in most soils.

French Breakfast Radishes are similar to cherry belles in their mild, spicy flavor, but are an elongated shape, red on top, and white on the bottom. The two-toned color of these radishes make them especially fun for kids to grow.

Easter Egg Radishes are a multicolored mix of red, pink, purple, and white radishes. They are small, round, and crispy, with a mild flavor. Harvesting these radishes is like a treasure hunt!

Daikon Radishes are large, long, white radishes native to Southeast Asia. They usually grow to be 2-4" in diameter and 6-20" long. Some kinds of daikon radishes grow round and look like giant turnips; they sometimes weigh up to 100 pounds! Daikon radishes are the most-grown vegetable in Japan, and can be eaten raw, stir-fried, grilled, baked, or pickled.

Watermelon Radishes are large, with a green/white skin, and a pink inside—just like a watermelon! Watermelon radishes are actually a type of daikon radish. These radishes are surprising, with a mild, delicious flavor.
